An exceptional virtual conference: a don't miss event!

A new world coming

How can Africa and its private sector navigate the change?

The economic upheaval wrought by the Covid-19 crisis has accelerated pre-existing trends.

Global competition is undergoing key changes as global value chains are reshaped, Sino-American rivalry grows, tackling climate change becomes a top priority and digitalisation accelerates.

At a time when major economies of the North are starting to recover thanks to mass vaccination policies and ambitious stimulus plans, how should Africa and its business leaders prepare for the new environment taking shape?

- What solutions should Africa and the AfCFTA bring to the table as deglobalisation gains ground?
- How can we rethink the business models of industries, such as oil, agriculture and construction, that must adapt amid the fight against climate change?
- On what terms can Africa's private sector effectively compensate for national governments' shortcomings in healthcare and education?
- From technological disruptions to social and environmental responsibility to new ways of working, what lessons can be drawn from such shifts and how can African business leaders become more agile in an uncertain world?
